KEMMLER SENTENCED AGAIN.

He Is to Die Within the Week of August 4.

Buffalo, July 3.—Murderer William Kemmler, in custody of Warden Durston and Keeper Daniel McNaughton, arrived here at 12:30 o'clock today.

Kemmler ate a hearty meal in the sheriff's office, and at 2 o'clock was brought before Judge Childs in the Supreme Court for sentence.

He looked well and carried himself unflinchingly, almost with unconcern.

When asked by the Judge if he had anything to say, he replied, "Noir."

The Judge then told Kemmler that he hoped the long delay had been taken advantage of to prepare himself for his awful end, but that he had yet time for repentance.

The Judge closed as follows:

"All the Court now has to say is that the sentence heretofore pronounced on you, carried into effect within the week beginning August 4, 1890 and may God have mercy on you."

Lawyer Hatch, Kemmler's counsel, did not appear and no opposition whatever was made to the sentence.

It looked as if the murderer had been deserted by his lawyer.

The Evening World correspondent asked Mr. Hatch if he would further oppose the carrying out of the sentence. He replied:

"No, Kemmler's jig is up."

Kemmler goes back to Auburn to-night.

BLOOD SPILLED

Battle on Broadway Between Striking and Working Cloakmakers.

Five Men Wounded Before the Police Reserves Reach the Spot.

An East Side Non-Union Shop Attacked by Strikers Later.

Abraham Rosenberg Shot in the Back During the Fray.

Hunger and Despair Increasing the Bitterness of the Labor Fight.

The bitterness which has been brewed between the striking cloakmakers and the manufacturers culminated in a lively battle on Broadway this morning.

At 8 o'clock from 300 to 400 of the striking operatives, made desperate by their protracted fight against their employers, attacked the employees of Merer Jonasson & Co., at 355 Broadway, between Leonard and Franklin streets.

BLOOD FLOWED FREELY.

Operatives, shipping hands, clerks and bookkeepers were assaulted and blood flowed freely from many scalp wounds.

The injured were:

William Vasser, aged twenty-two, operative, of 210 Second avenue, severe scalp wounds, taken to Chambers Street Hospital.

Robert Saxon, bookkeeper, slight scalp wound.

Charles Butler, stock clerk, slight scalp wound.

Russell, operative, badly bruised; sent home.

Joseph Friedenthal, shipping department, badly bruised.

Another considerable party of strikers made a demonstration in front of the factory of the Mercantile Cloth Company at 314 Broadway, but while threats were freely made the strikers failed to make an attack.

When their employees appeared and tried to enter the shop, they were pummeled by the strikers, who forbade them with vehement protestations to enter. Some were frightened away by the crowd and escaped unscathed.

Those who persisted were seized and hustled away by force. There were quite a number of these, and in a few minutes Broadway for two blocks was the scene of a dozen running fights with one helpless man in each case the centre of a fighting cyclone of enraged men.

For a time the riot threatened to become more serious, and the reserves at the Leonard street and Elizabeth street police stations were promptly summoned to the scene.

A STREAM OF BLUETOATS.

In three minutes 17 patrolmen armed with formidable night sticks rushed onto the scene from Leonard street led by Roundman Lendrican.

They were followed a moment later by a stream of blue-toats under Roundman McCann, who first out from Franklin street from the Sixth Precinct.

THE FIGHT QUICKLY OVER.

But the riot which the police had been called to quell was not there.

The fighting had lasted hardly a moment and the strikers had dispersed.

Not an arrest was made and none of the strikers employed by Jones & Co. could identify any of the strikers as his assailant.

EMBRILLING THEIR WEAPONS.

Most of the men who were assaulted said that the strikers were armed with knives, pistols, clubs, sandbags and pieces of leather and tried to create the impression that they had come in force for the purpose of making the attack.

When closely questioned by The Evening World reporter, however, not one of them could say that he had seen any of these weapons, but had been told that they were used.

One of them, Robert Simon, of 545 Broadway, said that the strikers had used nothing more deadly than umbrellas, but they used them with sufficient force to tear off a piece of scalp over his right ear.

Officer Seaman, of the Street-Cleaning squad, who was near the scene of the riot, but who failed to make an arrest, reported that the Elizabeth street station-house the assailants were Italians, but that they only used their umbrellas for weapons.

WHAT THE STRIKERS SAY.

He thought that they had not pressed the attack but because they had the umbrellas on account of the rain they used them.

The strikers claim that they were present on a peaceful mission, simply to prevent, if they could, the filling of their places with "scab" laborers, that they were taunted by the scabs with their deplorable condition, and it resulted in the unorganized and indiscriminate attack.

THE ATTACKED MEN'S STORY.

Charles Butler, of 530 East One Hundred and Twelfth street, is the stock clerk of the firm and his desk is nearest the Broadway entrance.

When the rioting began he says the strikers ran in, dragged him from behind his desk and into the street, and he said that he had to run the gauntlet to Canal street, but he climbed all the way.

Young Butler only suffered a slight scalp wound, and his story to the effect that the strikers had all sorts of deadly weapons is much doubted because of his escape without the slightest injury. He acknowledged that he did not see the knives he talked about.

HOW THEY WERE INJURED.

Bookkeeper Robert Simon was told by a cousin, a tailor, who was pummeled by the head and ran across the street to escape.

Joseph Friedenthal, buyer, was driven from the West Shore Railroad office on the corner of Franklin street.

Joseph Friedenthal, of 35 East Fourth street, an employee in the shipping department, was clubbed severely about the head and hands.

William Vasser, an operative, residing at 219 Second Avenue, had two severe constituting the backbone of the strike, last night met and resolved to hold out until January, if necessary.

A system of assessing has been devised which is calculated to secure to the men all the funds required to maintain the fight.

Chairman Dale said today that there was every prospect for bettering the condition of the cloak-makers and relieving their wants. The men were now in a position to hold out, and he predicted that the bosses would be forced to concede within the next ten days.

The idea of having a parade to-morrow has been abandoned. The men will, however, march on next Tuesday and there will be a monster mass-meeting at Cooper Union in the evening.

IT MAY RESULT IN A TRAGEDY.

The demonstrations of the men to-day may result in a tragedy.

Abraham Rosenberg and a crowd of striking tailors visited the tailoring shop of Samuel Ruloff, 102 Eldridge street, early this afternoon, and commenced an indiscriminate attack on Ruloff, his wife and the hands in his employ.

SHOT IN THE BACK.

Billet defended himself with his revolver, firing into the crowd and shooting Rosenberg in the back, inflicting a serious wound.

The crowd that visited Billet's home numbered about one hundred or one hundred and fifty in all.

They took the house by storm and ascending to the shop of Billet began destroying everything they could lay hands on.

While a horning of cloaks of cloth and ribbon and other materials, upon which alleged "scabs" were at work, others began smashing the furniture and throwing things out of the window.

POLICEMEN REMOVED.

Policemen of the Sanitary Squad, saw the articles flying out of the window, and entered the building to investigate.

Seeing him, the strikers started to run downstairs, and Sands taking in the situation undertook to detain them by blocking the narrow stairway. The agent of the building assisted him, and while they clogged the passage with their bodies both policeman and agent yelled: "Murder! Police!"

THIS HAD THE EFFECT OF BRINGING THREE OR four other policemen to the scene.

Billet and seven of the strikers were made prisoners and taken to the Essex Market Court. Rosenberg was taken to the Gouverneur Hospital. It is thought that two or three others received bullet wounds and were helped away by their companions.

EIGHTY YEARS OLD, AND LOST.

Cobbler Miller Started Out to Pay a Bill and Has Not Returned.

Louis Miller, a white-haired shoemaker, bending under the weight of eighty-one years, mysteriously disappeared from his home in this city, and his equally aged wife is distraught over his absence.

The old cobbler kissed his wife good-by at his shop, 175 Third avenue, Tuesday morning, telling her that he was going downtown to pay some bills and would be back in two hours.

The two hours soon passed and the old man did not return. The fact was reported to the police in a description of the missing shoemaker, and set out.

Old Mr. Miller had 147 with him when he left his shop.

In addition to his snowy white hair he wore a great beard and was dressed in brown trousers, white vest, brown coat and white shirt and hat.

On the third finger of his right hand he wore a large gold ring on which were inscribed the initials "P. H." and to his watch was attached a pocket containing the photograph of his wife.
